Hope Farmhouse
Cabin Creek
c. 1830-40
Private

The Hope farmhouse is the last surviving historic dwelling to define the former mill community of Cabin Creek, which has been active site of milling since the late seventeenth century. At the height of its development during the fourth quarter of the nineteenth century, the village boasted approximately a dozen houses, two grist and saw mill operations, a Methodist Protestant and Baptist churches, a school and at least two stores. With the growth of nearby Hurlock during the late nineteenth century, coupled with the widespread application of steam generated power to operate mills, the village of Cabin Creek settled into slow but steady decline after 1900.

The full chain-of-title history of the Hope farmhouse has not been established, but architectural features and construction evidence clearly place its erection during the second quarter of the nineteenth century. Due to Greek Revival and Federal style design elements, the house was most likely erected around 1830-40 in the traditional vernacular form with a side hall/parlor main block, a story-story one room wing, and a hyphenated service wing to the rear. Much of the original second quarter of the nineteenth century woodwork remains intact. During the late nineteenth century the story-and-a-half dining room wing was raised to a full two-story height that met the roofline of the main block.

The earliest confirmed resident of the house is Eben Prouse, who acquired a large portion of the Hope tract in February 1863. Eben Prouse assembled a sizable agricultural estate during the mid nineteenth century with the Hope tract exceeding one hundred acres on Cabin Creek. He is designated at this site on the Lake, Griffing, and

Stevenson Atlas, printed in 1877. Following Eben Prouse's death, his estate was subdivided and sold at public auction. The tract with the extant house, surrounded by 40 ½ acres, was described in the estate auction notice as SECOND: All that part of said tract of land named in said mortgage that was conveyed unto the said Ollie M. Prouse by Charles H. Prouse and wife, by deed dated the 17th day of November 1891,...containing 40 ½ acres of land, more or less, together with the buildings & improvements thereon, consisting of a large and comfortable dwelling house, store house, tenement house, and necessary outbuildings.

During the early to mid twentieth century the farm was transferred several times.

Long-time owners during the post World War I era were sisters Emily B. Edmundson and Mary R. Bosley, who sold the farm to Walton C Bounds in March 1942. Walton C. and Mae A. Bounds owned the farm between 1942 and 1974.

DESCRIPTION SUMMARY

Known alternately as the Hope farm, the Eben Prouse house, or more recently, the Gang house, this two-story, five-bay frame dwelling dates to the second quarter of the nineteenth century and was assembled in four distinct periods. The original house, built c. 1830-40, comprised a two-story, three-bay side hall/parlor main block that was extended to the south by a story-and-a-half dining room wing. Contemporaneous to the dining room wing was a service ell built with a hyphen and single-story kitchen. The hyphen roof was originally of low pitch whereas the one-room kitchen had a steeply pitched gable roof. The second period of construction, dating to the late nineteenth century, included the raising of the dining room section to a full two-story height to meet the roofline of the original house. During the early to mid 1970s, the house was renovated and restored. The hyphen roof was raised to meet the line of the kitchen gable, and a small infill section was built in the rear corner to house a first floor bathroom. The last period of construction involved the addition of an antique shop wing to the north end of the main block in 1985-86. The house is currently sheathed with beaded vinyl siding and the medium pitched gable roof is covered with asphalt shingles. The interior spaces retain a large percentage of its original second quarter of the nineteenth century woodwork reflected a mixture of Greek Revival and Federal era moldings. Standing off the southwest corner of the house is a modern gable roofed garage.

COMPREHENSIVE DESCRIPTION

The Hope farmhouse stands at 6306 East New Market-Elwood Road in the former mill village of Cabin Creek southwest of Hurlock, Dorchester County, Maryland. The two-story five-bay main block, dating around 1830-40, is supported on a low brick foundation and the exterior is covered with a layer of beaded vinyl siding over other modern siding that covers the original weatherboards. The steeply pitched gable roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Extending to the rear in an ell configuration is a story-and-a-half kitchen wing that is contemporaneous with the main house.

The east (main) elevation is an asymmetrical five-bay façade with a center entrance and flanking nine over-six and six-over-six sash replacement windows. The center entrance is sheltered by a gable-roofed portico. The six-panel front door is topped by a four-light transom featuring an unusual window design with a distinctive oval stick pattern at each vertical muntin. The north gable end addition covers the majority of an exterior three-course common bond brick chimney stack. Distinguishing the south gable end is another exterior brick stack with a corbelled base and a single flue stack above the first story height. The kitchen wing covers a large portion of the west (rear) wall of the former dining room wing. A beaded board door and six-over-six sash window marks the south side of the kitchen whereas a large brick stack has been built against the west gable end in the location of a former chimney stack.

The interior is distinguished by a large percentage of its original second quarter of the nineteenth century woodwork. The side passage retains its original staircase that is enhanced with a scroll decorated stringer and vertical paneling under the stringer. The handrail is marked by a turned newel post, oval profile handrail and square profile stick balusters. The staircase soffit is paneled as well as a five-panel door opens into the space beneath the landing. The hall is also trimmed with period chair rail and baseboard moldings. At the back of the hall is the original exterior six-panel door that opens into the first floor bathroom. To the north of the hall is the parlor, which is entered through a six-panel door featuring a beaded panel molding around each panel on both faces. The parlor is distinguished by a Greek Revival influenced mantel. The pilasters and frieze are enhanced with a cushion style molding in the center. The mantel shelf is faced with a cove and astragal profile molding. The yellow pine floor has been refinished and the original plaster replaced with wallboard. Stretching around the perimeter of the room is a period chair rail and baseboard molding.

The original dining room, now an informal living room, retains second quarter of the nineteenth century woodwork including an original mantel, chair rail and baseboard moldings. The fireplace has been reworked for modern use. The mantel features a two-panel design across the frieze. Surviving on the wall between the dining room and hyphen kitchen is a second quarter of the nineteenth century door.

The hyphen, now serving as a kitchen, is distinctive for the original horizontal board wall sheathing enhanced with edge beading. The exposed joist ceiling, however, was installed when the remodeling was done during the 1970s. The kitchen interior is distinguished by an original exposed joist ceiling with beaded edge ceiling boards. Fixed in the northeast corner of the room is a ladder type stair enclosed behind a later paneled partition. Late nineteenth-century beaded board doors were used to access the stair as well as the small storage area underneath.

The second floor of the main block retains second quarter of the nineteenth century woodwork in the north chamber and center chamber that open off a narrow hall. At the top of the staircase is a chamfered edge newel post featuring a lambs-tongue stop. The newel posts are joined with stick balusters to support a circular profile handrail. The hall features original chair rail and baseboard moldings and six-panel doors framed by cove and astragal backbands. The north chamber features a small mantel with a ogee molded backband and chair rail and baseboard moldings. Fixed in the center chamber is an enclosed staircase entered through a five-panel door. The stair enclosure is paneled as well. Adjacent to the staircase is a low four-panel door that provides access to the south chamber. The door retains a cast iron Suffolk style latch.

The unfinished attic has original roof framing and yellow pine flooring. The former gable end that was originally sheathed with weatherboards has been stripped of the siding with nail shanks left in the end wall studs. The rafters in the south end have plaster stains on the underside surface indicating that

This house is a five bay long, two story frame structure with a hyphen and one story kitchen built out the back. From the irregularity of the fenestration, the building appears to have been built in two sections. The north three bays of the structure appear earliest, with the remainder being a subsequent addition. All windows have 6/6 sash, except the kitchen which has 4/4 sash. The walls are covered with green asbestos and the roof with asphalt shingle. There is a chimney in all three outside gables, the north chimney being larger and part of the earliest part.

In front of the central door is a porch with segmentally arched heads and a partial wall below.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The house is important to the development of vernacular forms in the county. Obviously the builders were interested in achieving a certain symmetry with the extension, although the fenestration is a 'dead give-away'.
